Origin of binchotan coals and certification

There is a stamp certifying the origin of binchotan coals. It is the Prefecture of Wakayama that has embarked on this recognition process. Coals produced in this region carry a stamp such as this one :

The charcoal in our possession comes either from Wakayama, in which case it bears the stamp, or from the neighbouring prefecture of Kochi (and more precisely from the locality of Tosa). This region is located on the island of Shikoku opposite Wakayama, and charcoal has been produced there for at least as long, using exactly the same technique and the same wood as in Wakayama prefecture, Umamegashi holm oak. The prefecture of Kochi has not chosen to register their production in any kind of recognition process and therefore has no specific stamp.

Use

Place 2 sticks per litre in the tea water or in a carafe and leave for a few hours. We recommend that you keep two carafes on hand at all times to avoid any questions of "action time".

Duration of use

This may vary depending on your water consumption and its characteristics. Allow about 3 months and change the Binchotan when the water regains its original taste.

Origin Japan

The binchotan coals offered on our site come from Japan: Wakayama, Kochi on the island of Shikoku, and Miyazaki in Kyushu. They are recognised as the best coals in Japan, and are largely equivalent in quality. Some are known as Kishu Binchotan (for Wakayama), and Tosa Binchotan (for Kochi).

Size and shape

Binchotan are handcrafted products made from a natural material, wood. Their size and shape can therefore vary, and each stick is unique. We select and divide the Binchotan evenly into 3 categories : fine, medium and large. Please consult the size characteristics for each before making your choice.

Packaging

Two options are available when choosing the product, at no extra charge :

- "Unwrapped" : Binchotans are simply wrapped in brown food paper,
- "With packaging" : they are individually wrapped in thicker, sealed white food paper.
